Artist Statement

I create outdoor sculptures for public venues and programs.
I also create small-scale bronze fine art.

As a sculptor, my work involves researching and exploring organic forms and repeated patterns in nature, particularly all the tiny little living things. Nature reveals amazing wonders that inspire my artistic practice. I view the Earth and the individual as one living organism, fascinated by how life forms grow, adapt, and transform through symbiotic relationships.

My artwork is intended to be a playful reminder that wholeness is a collection of many diverse parts. My interest in public art opportunities stems from the power to spark the imagination. It can give pause to everyday thinking patterns and common experiences. Public art can encourage us to question what's around us, promote social awareness, and trigger personal growth. I aim to inspire connection, curiosity and wonder about the natural world.
